*“The bicycle is a bridge between travelers
and territories.”*

Cycle tourism is currently one of the world’s fastest-growing travel sectors, evolving far beyond a simple niche into a powerful driver of regional economic development. By attracting visitors who travel at a slow pace, this industry injects significant revenue directly into the heart of local economies, especially in rural and inland areas that are often overlooked by traditional mass tourism. These bike travelers spend more on local services, accommodation, and gastronomy, ensuring that the economic benefits remain within the community.

More than just a financial boost, cycle tourism is inherently regenerative. For residents, it brings improved infrastructure and services; for visitors, it offers a connection to the places they cross. This virtuous cycle creates a sustainable ecosystem where tourism doesn’t just consume a destination but actively contributes to its vitality and preservation.
